THAMES RIVER ANTHOLOGY.

High, high ever the city, Silhouetted like a giant creme against the night sky,

A Zeppelin havered a few nights ago, Flicking its deadly ashes upon the populace beneath.

But a bare three miles from where I stood a bomb exploded. As the vile thing seared its ruddy way through the air The people ran scattering this way and that in an impulse of Mr. Couzens shouldn't have taken seriously Mr. Ford's views on matters unrelated to the automobile business. Most of Mr. Ford's utterances on such things are no weightier than the observations of a baseball player upon tobacco, or Mr. Thomas A. Edison's or Mr. Andrew Carnegie's opinions on things literary. Still, as Dulcinea once confided, the newspaper must have something to fill up with.

Perhaps the personalty tax makes liars, as Mr. Seligman remarks. And it may have other similarities to the divorce laws and the ordinances regarding motor vehicles.

WERHENRATH'S CRUDENESS GOES BIG IN PEORIA.

Wr. Reinald Werrearch, hardone . . . performed with great success, and pechaps a mere effective appeal to those who did not appreciate Miss Farrar's finished art.

Half a mile from Braves Field Monday afternoon we lost our way. "Can you tell me where Braves Field is?" we asked a man. "No," he said. The park is new, so we asked him whether he knew where the baseball grounds were, the place the world series was being played. "I didn't know there was a baseball game in town," he said. "Oh," he ventured. "You're a stranger, too?" "No," he said. "I was born here. Lived here forty-two years." . . . He was wearing a large button, inscribed "Anti-Suffrage." "V. for w."

The Red Sox are, of course, champions of the world. Yet an astronomer or a map-maker must have to smile when he realizes that St. Louis and Boston are the world's boundaries.

Whether it should be world series or world's series remains undecided. Our vote is for the former. But what is the plural of Bronx? Should the order be "Bring us a couple of Bronges"?

The principal successes were on the Styr and Stripa Rivers .-Evening Post.

A streak of lightning shooting across the hall, the loud rumbling of thunder, the crash of a cannon, and the unfurling of a huge American fag! Could a more suspicious opening usher in the mystic hour of midnight at the first annual hall of the Moving Picture Operators' Union at Convention Hall last night? With twenty spotlights, each equipped with round, colored discs, playing on them, 600 couples danced to their heart's content until the wee sma' (with apologies to Mr. Robert Burns) hours of the morning.

The grand march, led by International Organizer James Lemke of New York, proved an interesting and novel feature. The march represented a "movie" film winding and unwinding about an imaginary red.

If sporting writers had any originality they'd refer to the tickets of admission to big games as Coveted Pasteboards. It is a snappy phrase and we hope somebody will use it, now that it is released, during the football season.

Dulcinea, riding back from yesterday's game, was looking out of the car-window: "I was thinking," she observed, and J. A. G. heard her, "that no landscape gardener can ever make anything as beautiful as Nature."

It is a part requiring great skill.

The role as played by Mr. Gillette is eloquent testimony to the possibilities of force which lie in repression. Not once during the play does the actor raise his voice above a conversational tone, and yet in the four acts he has to convey any number of varying emotions to the audience.

To attempt a technical criticism of Sherlock Holmes would be hardly worth while. It is above or beyond criticism, as you chose. As the detective might describe the play to his con-
